Effective Presentation Strategies

Fundamentals of Professional Presentations:

- Defining the Purpose
- Analyzing the audience and locale
- Organizing Contents
- Preparing Outline
- Visuals aids

Fundamentals of professional presentations:

Defining the Purpose

- Purpose of presentation not only decides the content and style but also affects the amount of audience interaction
- For instance : when your purpose is to provide information or to analyze a situation- you and audience interact in a limited manner
- When your purpose is to persuade people to take a particular action or to collaborate with them in solving a problem, or making a decision , the interaction would be more.
- You begin to provide facts figures that will increase your audience's understanding of the subject
- You may offer arguments in defense of certain conclusions and recommendations .
- You may invite them to participate by expressing their need, suggesting solution and formulating conclusions and recommendations.

Analyzing the audience and locale

- All audiences have one thing in common . They are at the receiving end of your communication.
- The nature of your audience has a direct impact on the strategy you devise for your presentation
- Prior knowledge of audience's characteristics
- Prior knowledge of audience to be confirmed from the host
- Make a guesstimates of your own
- Differences in linguists and cultural backgrounds
- Slow speech , accent and visual aids to create an understanding
- If the audience is known to you adapt your style
- If target audience is from your own organization- their likes, dislikes, degree of knowledge , information

Analyzing the audience and locale

- If you know in advance how your audience is likely to react

  Structure your presentation and adopt your style to help them feel comfortable.
- We communicate to inform, persuade, or entertain . Whatever may be the purpose, give impression that you want to share your views with them.
- At the start of the your presentation make eye contact with your audience,. This will help to access whether they are excited , resistant, hostile, or dull.
- Always begin with a smile and greet them in a pleasant tone.
- If you get an impression that they are not interested change your tone.
- Achieve effectiveness in your communication by responding to audience feedback.
- Give a personal tinge if you feel that they are not interested

Analyzing the audience

- Your structure and presentation should be clear.
- Key points should be emphasized and repeated at appropriate moments.
- Structure of presentation can be skillfully emphasized by pauses through interaction with the audience
- You can also use visual aids to hold audience attention and promote understanding.
- If you are going to speak something controversial or break a bad news , set time before presentation to chat with those people who will be affected.
- This will help to : build support, anticipate problems, consider strategies

Analyzing the audience and locale

- Locale: Every location has its unique physical environment .
- You may present in a large auditorium, small conference room
- Know the physical setting , find out you will have a podium, table, public address system
- Pay attention to physical conditions confronting your audience such as seating , room temperature and lighting.
- If any problem ask for alternative arrangements or modify your materials, visual aids , and style to suit the environment

Organizing Contents

- People vary in their ability to speak confidently in public.
- You feel little nervous in facing the audience.
- Always prepare more matter than required., this will make you feel confident
- When you get on stage take your time to arrange the notes
- Take deep breaths before you start
- Your first words will sound louder and more confident
- Breathing will help to concentrate.
- Make an eye contact one person for a few seconds before you move up to next
- Begin with a smile , you offer warm welcome
- If you are novice , memorize the first few sentences so that you can move ahead easily

Organizing Contents

- Arrange the contents of your presentation into three major parts :-
- Introduction
- Main Body
- Conclusion
- Introduction: It comprises the porch or the opening statement., the aim and the layout
- The porch can be a question , a sincere greeting , or a starting statement
- It catches the attention of the audience and prepares them to the rest of the presentation
- Depending on the tropic you can use a question, a quotation, a statement or even an anecdote to grab attention
- After the porch , state clearly and precisely the purpose of your presentation

Introduction and Main Body

- End your introduction by giving an over view of or road map of your presentation
- A good introduction is a vehicle to lead the audience into the main body of speech
- Main body:
- The main body, the discussion or the next part follows the introduction and supports your aim or specific purpose.
- Depending on topic and introduction , you can choose from any of the following patterns:
- i) Chronological: Organizing the details which you can arrange sequentially (the order in which the events occurred or appeared)the method is useful for topics like ‘ the profile of your institute ;, history of sports’ etc.
- ii) categorical: Easiest and commonly use patterns. The entire presentation can be divided into various topics and sub topics arrange on the basis of subordination and coordination. Eg- ‘Role of advertising’, Environmental Protection,’ Importance of Professional Presentation’

Introduction and Main Body

- iii) Cause and Effect: You can adopt this method whenever there exists a cause and effect relationship
- You have to illustrate and explain the causes of the situation and then focus on the effects.Eg- 'Impact of cinema on children', Internet boon or bane'
- iv)Problem – solution:
- You divide your presentation into two parts.
- In the first part describe and analyze the cause and effect of the problem
- After the analysis you can move on to main objective of your presentation to suggest or propose a solution to the problem.eg- 'population explosion'.
- Resist the temptation to include too many points in the body of your speech
- Restrict yourself to four or five main points
- Help your audience follow your presentation by summarizing your points

Introduction and Main Body

- Every main point is a unit of thought , an essential part of a speech.
- Each point should be clearly stated independent of other main points.
- Balance the time devoted to each point accordingly
- Plan how you will bridge on link points so that you move smoothly from one part of your presentation to next.
- Make use of traditional expressions like -therefore, because , in addition to ,apart from that, on the contrary , next, etc.

- Internal preview, internal summarries and sign posts help not only not only you in understanding where you are the speech , but helps the audience grasp the topic.
- The statement would serve as sign post to tell the audience that you have completed two and there are two more to go.

Conclusion:

- You can conclude your presentation by reviewing the main points.
- Give a signal such as sum up, to conclude , to review.
- As you conclude remind the audience about the purpose of your presentation, which you can persuade to or inform them.
- Tell them what you want them to do , think, or remember based on your presentation.
- Avoid the temptation to wrap up in haste
- You can conclude with a quotation or recall the earlier story, joke, anecdote with which you commenced your presentation to bring it to full circle.
- Very often presentations are followed by a question period. Questions provide you with vital feedback about the ideas that you have put forth in your presentation
- Preparing for questions, therefore is important as preparing for your presentation.
- How does a presenter cope up with difficult questions?
- A seasoned speaker has to overcome to emerge more confident and self assured.
- If a questioner tries to trip you with a difficult question maintain a polite but firm attitude.
- Do not reveal annoyance
- Quickly divert irrelevant questions

Preparing an Outline:

- It is mechanical frame work in which are fitted the bits and pieces of your presentation
- Serves you as a guide to show the right path
- Your outline can be in the form of words, phrases , or sentences
- Introduction
- Product Appearance
- Various Parts
- Functioning
- Facilities
- Conclusions

Visual Aids

- Spoken words ephemeral
- Visual support Handouts, chalk boards, flip chart, overheads, slides, computers etc.
- If a picture is clear, simple and appropriate to its purpose it will deliver the message more accurately and quickly
- Select a visual that suits your style and contents
